ABSTRACT: Sweden has a long history of mining and mineral exploration with companies like ABEM and MALÅ Geoscience pioneering several electromagnetic (EM) exploration methods and instruments since the 1920's. The development of the new exploration methods lead to the rapid discovery of a large number of ore deposits in northern Sweden in the following years with Boliden (1924-1967) being the most well-known mine. This presentation will take you through Swedish geology and mining history and the peculiarities of mineral exploration in an environment that has seen multiple glaciations. The presentation will cover parts of the Swedish Mining Code and exploration practices, and will consider if any exploration methods and parts of the Mining Code could be applied to conditions in the United States.

BIOGRAPHY: Anders Hogrelius, Geologist and Senior Consultant, has been with Earth Consultants International, Inc. since 2010 but has a background in Exploration Geology working for both Junior Exploration Companies as well as larger Mining Corporations like Lundin Mining. He has an extensive knowledge in Scandinavian geology and mining history and has been involved in all stages of mineral exploration from project generation to mine planning. He holds a Master of Science in Earth Sciences from Uppsala University in Sweden and a California Professional Geologists license. Anders is based out of Santa Ana, California. Previously he established Earth Consultants International's Swedish branch office in Vasteras, Sweden and was the local manager until 2015.
